THE FIRST 5 MINUTES OF THE GAME

When you begin the game you are free falling through a storm. Lightning sporadically illuminates the sky, showing brief, vivid flashes of memories. You struggle to take a breath as you plummet, out of control, into the eye of the storm, towards your certain death.

Squinting, eyelashes battling the rain, you catch a glimpse of a large object that you are hurtling towards. You brace yourself for impact, for death, confused and terrified and –

You are on the deck of a ship, rain pummeling the wooden boards around you. You look up to see four shadowy figures on the bridge, gazing into the distance, with an old man at the helm.

This game is a bit odd. The graphics are stunning & gorgeous. The voice acting not so great and same with some of the sound effects.

The way the story is delivered is pretty unique & interesting though and the concept and narrative in generalis great.

I'm not usually a fan of puzzle games either but this did them pretty well. Some of them kind of made me think harder than expected and even frustrated me but I enjoyed navigating them. There some minor intense situations but not often enough that you're forced to play at a different pace.

I enjoyed my experience overall and clocked just under 16 hours. It could definitely use some improvements but it was good enough for a once through.
